

PLANNING YOUR TRIP

It is recommended to make sure you have all the necessary documents for immigration and enrollment. Arriving in Thailand, you may be asked by the immigration and health officers. All passengers entering Thailand are checked through the Immigration Control. That's why you need to know about the regulations of your nationality.

All the documents you have must correspond in details. For example, some students are known by a "western" name or a nickname. However, if the documents from the university carry your "western" name while your passport and visa carry your full name, this may cause problems and will delay the process of immigration as the officers shall ensure that both of the names actually refer to the same person!

Keep the following documents in your hand luggage:

- A valid passport
- Your visa and/or other entry clearance documents, if required
- Travel documents
- Health clearance certificates, as required
- A letter of Acceptance from Khon Kaen University
- A letter confirming that you have sufficient money to pay for your fees, accommodation and subsistence during your stay. This could be a recent bank statements, proof of scholarship or a sponsor's letter
- Your original examination certificates or certified true copies
- Enough cash for the first few days

Once the Immigration Office approves your entrance, your passport will be stamped with the conditions of entry. The expiry date of the stamp supercedes your visa. This means you will have to extend your visa and/or conditions of stay before it expires, and it is the date that you must recollect.

Vaccination and Medication

Students must check their family physician and make sure they have the most current set of booster shots, such as tetanus and diphtheria.

The World Health organization (WHO) recommends that all travelers going to developing countries should get hepatitis A vaccinations. Students planning to stay for a year or exceed should get a complete series of booster shots and the vaccination series for both hepatitis A and B. The travelers may also consider getting vaccinated against Japanese encephalitis if as they plan to travel near bordering and rural areas.

Malaria and dengue fever in large cities and tourist areas in Thailand is rarely seen nowadays, but there's still a risk in the rural and bordering areas, especially near Cambodia and Burma. Nevertheless, you don't need to take any preventive medications. The WHO has placed Thailand in the category IV, which means the disease has already become drug-resistant. If you take preventive drugs, they can make it more difficult to treat the disease if you do catch it.

The best prevention is using mosquito repellent in the risky areas. Please bring either DDT containing products, or purchase sprays that use citronella in Asia. These are the most recommended and effective preventions.

Thailand is having problems with the spread of bird flu, and at this time, there is no vaccine against it. Because the Bird Flu transmitted from birds to humans, not humans to humans, risk to farmers and food preparation employees is high for having in contact with raw meat and infected cage birds. There is no problem if the meat has been cooked. For precaution, students should stay away from poultry farms and from aviary exhibits in zoos but should not be overly worried.
